Zhu, Hong Adèle. "Le Chiendent ou le mécanisme de la fiction romanesque." Thèse de doctorat en littérature française. Directeur Jacques Neefs. Université de Paris VIII (Vincennes / Saint-Denis), octobre 2000. %% Zhu indicates in her resumé that she is looking at the characteristics of Queneau's fiction in order to discover its role in contemporary literature. For her, style is not only an effort of linguistic creation but creation as well in narration, plot, characterization, etc. All of the writer's authorial concerns, when focussed on the development of a personal writing style, become part of the stylistic interpretation of the story. She consequently examines Le Chiendent on different levels/ linguistics, structure, theme, and writing. Her conclusion is that for Queneau, from the very beginning, seems to consist of a systematization of technique for the sole purpose of the stylization of writing.

The author divides her first part, "Le Récit impossible," into four sections: "genèse de la fiction," "une nouvelle forme du récit," "la fiction au second degré," and "une nouvelle logique de la fiction." Her second part, "Le Récit enchanté," consists of "la mise en oeuvre de l'intrigue" and "la narration comme technique essentielle de la fiction romanesque." Cf.
